The Palestine Liberation Organization is angling for formal recognition by the U.S. as the political price for leaving Beirut and abandoning Lebanon, Palestinian and Lebanese sources said yesterday.

"We are fighting for that, to force the United States to recognize us," said Hamd el-Hassan, political adviser to PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, following a one-hour meeting with Lebanon's Moslem elder statesman Saeb Salam.

Salam has been a key mediator between the PLO leadership and U.S. chief mediator Philip Habib in efforts to evacuate the PLO from most of West Beirut.

"I am sure that if there were direct talks between the PLO and America through Philip Habib, it would be a very important step for the PLO, and the PLO would be ready to be more flexible and rethink a lot of things," el-Hassan told reporters.

Arafat was yesterday reported to be willing to reverse his current refusal to evacuate his trapped fighters by U.S. Fleet warships if the Lebanon administration granted recognition to the PLO.

Asked about a report that Salam has been trying to arrange a face-to-face meeting between Habib and himself, el-Hassan told reporters "Habib does not have the courage to meet a Palestinian."

Lebanon's incumbent Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, another leading intermediary between Habib and Arafat, told reporters after a meeting with the American troubleshooter yesterday "These are the most difficult negotiations. We have to deal indirectly with so many parties."

Foreign Minister Fuad Butros, who also met with Habib in Ba'abda yesterday, told reporters the talks had concentrated on what he called the "famine blockade" of West Beirut.

"It was important to seek Mr. Habib's help to lift this blockade which has begun to affect vital human institutions and women and children," he said.

Habib's efforts to end the crisis in Lebanon peacefully apparently remain bogged down on Syria's refusal to allow PLO evacuees into its territory and the PLO insistence on a UN-policed disengagement of PLO and Israeli forces in Beirut before the evacuation.

Syria's position prompted Arafat to renew the offer to move out of Beirut to Tripoli and the Akkar province, and to the Bekaa Valley until arrangements were made for them to disperse among Arab countries willing to take them.

Arafat also reiterated his demand that a UN-sponsored multinational force be deployed in West Beirut to stand between the PLO and Israeli forces.

W. Beirut car bomb kills 1, wounds 30

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

BEIRUT. — A booby-trapped car yesterday exploded in a densely populated neighborhood of West Beirut, killing one person, wounding a reported 30 others and setting the Palestine Research Centre on fire, witnesses said.

Rescue workers said two of the wounded were children.

The explosives were packed in a Peugeot car parked at the entrance of a seven-story apartment building housing the centre. None of the staff of the centre was injured.

Glass windows of the nearby headquarters of the International Red Cross were shattered by the 6.20 p.m. blast, and gunmen sealed off the area firing into the air to keep curious pedestrians away.

Two ambulances collided in the rush to evacuate the wounded.

About 300 people reportedly have been killed or wounded in 13 such car bombings in West Beirut since Israel invaded Lebanon on June 6.

The PLO has accused Israel of masterminding the bombings, charging they were all carried out by Israeli-hired agents from various parts of Southern Lebanon.

Meanwhile, Lebanese military sources reported yesterday that Israel has strengthened its siege of Beirut with two armoured and mechanized infantry brigades.

The sources said the Israeli command also regrouped its forces around Beirut to absorb the reinforcements and tighten the noose on the PLO.

Western diplomats and Lebanese government sources estimate Israel's forces around Beirut number 35,000 to 40,000 troops with about 300 tanks and up to 500 armoured personnel carriers, according to the AP.

Late Monday afternoon, Israel opened one of three crossings between East and West Beirut to two-way car traffic. Lebanese sources said troops searched the cars to prevent supplies being taken into the western sector.

120 die in Mexican train disaster

TEPIC, Mexico (UPI). — At least 120 persons were killed when a train carrying 1,560 passengers plunged into a mountain gorge on Sunday, the Mexican news service reported yesterday.

The state-owned Notimex news service said that the accident occurred when the train travelling south from Arizona fell 240 metres down a gorge near the western city of Tepic.

It said that officials believed the number of dead would climb even higher. Only 35 of the bodies had been identified so far.

Herman Sanchez, a spokesman for the Red Cross in Tepic, said three of the dead were U.S. citizens, though he did not know their names.

Rescue helicopters airlifted many of the dead and most seriously injured to Guadalajara. The rescue mission was hampered by rains and the mountainous terrain, the spokesman said.

A team of government investigators was en route to Tepic, about 650 km. northwest of Mexico City, to investigate why 13 cars of a 26-car train jumped the tracks and plunged into the mountain canyon.

Engineer Jose Luis Velasco told his superiors the train derailed because a section of roadbed had eroded and the tracks collapsed under the passing engines, Notimex reported.

The train was travelling from Nogales on the Arizona border to Guadalajara when it derailed.

U.S. concerned at Iran troop massing

WASHINGTON (AP). — Defence Department spokesman Henry Catto yesterday said he has seen reports of "many tens of thousands" of troops concentrated along the Iran-Iraq border and voiced concern about the possibility of a major flare-up of fighting there.

Catto's remarks at a briefing came amid published reports from the Gulf area that Iran is massing troops for a drive into Iraq.

Under questioning, Catto said he does not know whether, as indicated, the Iranians are preparing for an offensive into Iraq. At one point, however, he spoke of a "considerable number of troops on both sides" concentrated in the border area.

Some U.S. intelligence sources have estimated that as many as 200,000 Iranian troops have been massed facing Iraq.

Freij: Arabs erred by making war, not peace

BETHLEHEM. — Elias Freij, the last prominent Palestinian mayor in office, chastised the PLO and Arab world yesterday for waging fruitless wars and issuing hollow slogans instead of "challenging Israel for peace."

Tired and clearly depressed, Freij said the war in Lebanon has left him in despair over the future of the Palestinian cause.

"What is left for us to do?" he asked rhetorically. "To go to the United Nations begging? After all, a beggar is a beggar."

"I have always taken independent lines," he said. "I face things in a realistic way and act accordingly, irrespective of who shouts."

In an interview conducted by United Press International in his spacious wood-paneled sitting room overlooking Manger Square, Freij was nearly as critical of the PLO and Arab world as of Israeli policies.

"I really wanted the PLO to challenge Israel for peace," he said. "Our whole position is weaker now. You see, last May the PLO had its forces, its power base in Lebanon. Where is all that? Where does that leave us?"

"To continue selling empty slogans? You go to the mayor of Nablus, he will give you a million slogans," Freij said of Bassam Shak'a who was dismissed by Israeli authorities last spring. "What are they worth? If you squeeze them, do you get any butter or juice?"

Freij said the PLO had been trapped into radical opposition to Israel by its Arab patrons who now have "betrayed" the Palestinians.

"The test for the Arabs came when (the late Egyptian president Anwar) Sadat came to Jerusalem," he said. "Who supported Sadat's peace initiative? The PLO couldn't take a different line."

"Had the Arabs challenged Israel for peace and not for war many years ago, the outcome may have been more promising," he said.

Freij said Israel's ultimate goal was annexation of the West Bank and Gaza, home for 1.2 million Palestinian Arabs.

"The ring is closing, the restrictions are increasing," Freij said. "They are taking our land."

As for U.S. pressure on Israel, "the Arabs are under hypnosis that America can really do wonders if she wants — that she can tell the Israelis 'do this, do that.' I believe the Lebanon war has proven that the U.S. has very weak leverage."

Nevertheless, he said, "There will be no autonomy...they (the Israelis) are deluding themselves, whether there is a PLO or no PLO."

Palestinians, Freij said, "will continue to aspire for a homeland and they will continue with their struggle for freedom and independence. That is for sure."

Legitimate' Palestinian problems must be resolved — Shultz

By WOLF BLITZER

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of State-designate George Shultz yesterday said that the crisis in Lebanon has made "painfully and totally clear" that "the legitimate needs and problems" of the Palestinians must be resolved "urgently and in all their dimensions."

During confirmation hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Shultz balanced his strong support for a resolution of the Palestinian question by underlining his commitment to Israel's legitimate security concerns. He called Israel "our closest friend in the Middle East," adding that "the righteousness of her preoccupation with matters of security cannot be disputed."

Shultz said the PLO would have to accept Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, recognize Israel's right to exist and "get off their guerrilla kick" before the U.S. would recognize it as the representative of the Palestinians.

If the PLO met these conditions, he said, it would cease to be the same organization.

In response to a question, he acknowledged certain "terrorist tendencies" of the PLO.

But the main thrust of Shultz's opening remarks on the Arab-Israeli conflict focused on the need to resolve the Palestinian question once and for all. "We owe it to Israel to work with her to bring about a comprehensive peace," he said.

While refusing flatly to condemn Israel for its drive into Lebanon, the secretary-designate expressed regret over the Israeli decision. He was blunt in criticizing the Israeli settlements on the West Bank and the recent dismissals of Arab mayors there.

Shultz said he was completely severing his commercial relationship with the Bechtel Construction group, promising that his eight years with the firm would have no impact on his thinking as secretary of state.

He warmly praised Bechtel, which has enormous business dealings in the Arab world, as "a truly remarkable organization." But he promised to sell all of his outstanding stock in the privately owned company so there would be no legal conflict of interest. He also assured the panel that he would remove himself from any issue — as secretary of state — that has a direct impact on Bechtel business dealings around the world so that there would be no appearance of a conflict of interests.

Shultz was repeatedly praised by Senators, including Chairman Charles Percy of Illinois. The committee is expected to wind up the hearings today. The full Senate will probably confirm his nomination by the end of this week.

During questioning by Percy, Shultz vowed to make the Middle East one of his "highest priorities."

His comments on the region during his opening statement did not deviate from the public position of the Reagan administration.

Shultz said he favours sending U.S. marines to Lebanon to help evacuate Palestinian fighters but said it could take a month.

He said he thought sending 1,000

Reagan: Too early for U.S. force

WASHINGTON. — President Ronald Reagan said last night that the time was not ripe for sending U.S. troops to Lebanon. Reagan told a meeting of congressional leaders that the appropriate conditions did not yet exist; but he said he had not gone back on his idea of sending troops to help solve the Lebanese crisis. The congressmen got the impression that the president was less optimistic than before about the possibility of achieving a peaceful solution of the Beirut crisis.

A senior official in Jerusalem also denied that Israel will give the diplomatic process "30 (more) days" in which to achieve a PLO withdrawal. (He was referring to the statement yesterday by U.S. Secretary of State-designate George Shultz in Washington, who spoke of "30 days" which he believed the U.S. special envoy Philip Habib needed to achieve the PLO's evacuation of the Lebanese capital.)

Arab League cancels summit on Lebanon

TUNIS (AP). — Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba announced yesterday he had called off the Arab emergency summit on Lebanon because not enough league members had agreed to participate.

A statement from the presidential palace said the summit had been intended to be held at "the highest level of participation" because of the gravity of the situation in Lebanon, but had to be abandoned because only 12 of the 21 league members had indicated a willingness to take part.

The statement said that the countries which had not responded to the call to attend tomorrow's scheduled summit included Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

Earlier, the French news agency Agence France Presse quoted unnamed diplomatic sources as saying the planned meeting fell apart after Arab moderates, notably Saudi Arabia, objected strenuously to plans by the hard-liners to denounce the American role in the Middle East.

Tehiya meets to decide on whether to enter coalition

By SARAH HONIG

Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The 30-member expanded Tehiya secretariat convened last night to decide on whether the party ought to open negotiations about entering the coalition. Pressure has been mounting inside the party ever since the war in Lebanon began to do so and thus bolster the government.

Late last night, the secretariat was still in session. Predictions were that a decision to start negotiations would emerge.

Yesterday's meeting was preceded by two meetings between Tehiya leaders and Prime Minister Menachem Begin. The first took place Monday when Begin conferred with MK Yuval Ne'eman. Yesterday he had "a good and substantive talk" with MK Gula Cohen and Tehiya activist Gershon Shafat.

Although some three weeks ago Tehiya rejected a proposal to join the coalition forthwith, it had already then softened its opposition

Israel gives more time for Beirut talks

By BENNY MORRIS

Post Diplomatic Reporter

Israel is willing to pursue the negotiations for a political settlement of the Beirut crisis "for a few more days," despite a growing feeling among policy-makers in Jerusalem that the talks are "leading nowhere," according to senior Israeli officials.

The policy-makers, according to one senior official, are considering a "number of military options" which fall short of a massive onslaught on PLO-held West Beirut. "We will not adopt a line of action which the western states (once) preferred," said the official, referring to British and American attacks on German and Japanese cities during World War II which caused massive civilian casualties.

"It is clear that the diplomatic negotiations will have to be accompanied by intermittent military actions. The question is only what type of actions and when," said one senior official.

Israeli policy-makers have apparently been influenced by the tone of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's message to Prime Minister Menachem Begin at the end of last week, in which Reagan cautioned that a "military assault" on West Beirut would "gravely affect our bilateral relations."

But at the same time, an Israeli cabinet source last night denied an Israel Television report that Israel will pursue the diplomatic process for as long as the U.S. feels that that process holds out a hope of achieving a peaceful PLO evacuation of Beirut.

A senior official in Jerusalem also denied that Israel will give the diplomatic process "30 (more) days" in which to achieve a PLO withdrawal. (He was referring to the statement yesterday by U.S. Secretary of State-designate George Shultz in Washington, who spoke of "30 days" which he believed the U.S. special envoy Philip Habib needed to achieve the PLO's evacuation of the Lebanese capital.)

"We don't know where he got the 30 days from. We have no information on (how Shultz arrived at) this. It is certainly a very long time," said the senior official.

According to the official, there has been "no progress at all during the past few days" in the talks in Beirut among Habib, Lebanese intermediaries, the PLO and Israeli officials, and there are no signs that any progress is impending.

"No one seems to know the exact state of affairs — not we Israelis, not the U.S., not the Lebanese and not even the PLO," said a senior cabinet minister last night. "But one thing is clear: the PLO will not remain in Beirut, we won't stand for it."

The minister was repeating a statement made by Begin published in yesterday's Ma'ariv. "I'm convinced the terrorists will leave Lebanon. As I've already announced, not one of them will remain there."

Begin also said that he has not "lost hope" in the possibility of achieving a diplomatic solution. Begin said Israel must act with "common sense and patience."

"The feeling has grown that there is a need for action which is not political," said the senior minister, alluding to implementation of a military option.

The cabinet may meet today or tomorrow to review the situation, said one official.

"Time is working against us," said a senior official in Jerusalem, echoing the argument made by Defence Minister Ariel Sharon during the start of the siege of West Beirut last month when he argued for immediate military action.

It is understood that a number of cabinet ministers, including senior ones, are opposed to a large-scale onslaught on West Beirut, which could lead to a large number of IDF casualties and to huge civilian losses.

"But those who say 'no' (to the military option) must present an alternative," said the senior official. "Israel cannot agree to a continued forces prior to the evacuation operation.

The U.S., France and Greece have agreed in principle to contribute troops to the proposed disengagement force.

In Paris, meanwhile, a leading PLO moderate, Issam Sartawi, yesterday called for the U.S. to recognize the PLO and establish contacts with it, saying the organization had formally acknowledged Israel's right to exist.

Sartawi also urged West European governments, especially France, West Germany and Britain, to formally recognize the organization.

Speaking to the French Institute for International Relations, a private foreign affairs group, Sartawi said the PLO had "formally conceded to Israel in the most unequivocal manner the right to exist on a reciprocal basis."

Sartawi said the 301-member Palestinian National Council acknowledged recognition of Israel when it passed unanimously in April 1981 a resolution approving a Soviet plan for peace in the Middle East.

The Soviet plan, presented by President Leonid Brezhnev to the 26th Communist Party congress in February, said among other things that it was essential for the security of the region that Arabs recognize Israel's right to exist within secure borders.

In Damascus, another top Palestinian official said yesterday that the PLO in Lebanon "is there to stay" and reiterated the PLO's demand for an independent state "on our own national soil."

"We want no replacement land, not in Lebanon, not in Jordan. We want our independent state on our national soil and we accept nothing less than that," Khaled Fahoum, the head of the Palestine national council, told thousands of demonstrators in the Syrian capital.

The mass demonstration was staged as a show of solidarity with Palestinians in Lebanon and support for the regime of President Hafez Assad.

Knesset committee: Begin is avoiding us

By ASHER WALLFISH
Post Knesset Correspondent

The Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee is trying to maintain parliamentary supervision over events in Lebanon, despite the non-cooperation of Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Defence Minister Ariel Sharon.

Committee member Danny Rosolio (Alignment-Labour) yesterday complained to chairman Eliahu Ben Elissar that Begin and Sharon had avoided the committee for the past week.

Both Begin, who was scheduled to attend on Monday, and the chief of staff, who was due to attend yesterday, cancelled their appearances. Sharon was not scheduled to attend.

Rosolio said that such figures could not stay away from the committee at a time of political and military tension. He told reporters later that Begin and Sharon were "running away from questions." He also criticized Ben-Elissar for "not being firm enough."

Labour's Abba Eban complained in a letter to Ben-Elissar that "the situation has no precedent in the annals of the committee and is inadmissible."

Meanwhile Shulamit Aloni (Alignment-CRM) tabled a parliamentary question to the defence minister and the justice minister asking what legal validity the government had given to the gazetting by Sharon of emergency regulations empowering IDF officers to arrest anybody, anywhere outside Israel's borders.

Aloni noted that the regulations had been gazetted under paragraph 9a of the Justice and Administration Procedures Ordinance on June 8, 1982.

Noting a number of contradictions in the text of the regulations, Aloni said that Sharon had virtually created a military government in Lebanon, which was unaffected by the laws of Israel, of Lebanon, or by any international code.

Shinui MK Amnon Rubinstein yesterday published a letter he received from Begin containing the assurance that the IDF would not allow the Christian militias in Lebanon to harass the Druse there.

In reply to Rubinstein's plea to prevent such harassment, Begin wrote: "I have issued unambiguous orders to prevent all harm being caused to the Druse in Lebanon. I know that these orders have been carried out. We shall remain vigilant."

Mapan's Dov Zakin yesterday tabled a parliamentary question asking Sharon to publish authoritative figures for PLO weaponry seized in Lebanon, and to confirm or deny the figures published by Yossi Sarid (Alignment-Labour) earlier in the week.

Zakin also asked Sharon to be more specific about his statement that "many more tanks had been discovered than Israel had believed" and that the PLO set up artillery positions in central and South Lebanon containing "hundreds of pieces."

He asked for an explanation of a statement by one IDF officer, published in the press, about "enough arms to equip one million PLO fighters."

Jacques Amir (Labour) demanded in the Finance Committee that every soldier serving in Lebanon, who was unemployed when called up, should be guaranteed six months work on being demobilized, funded from state budgets.

Nava Arad (Labour) charged in a statement that more than 50 doctors now in uniform in Lebanon had lost their jobs because of their call-up, and would not be entitled to unemployment pay either, on being demobilized.

Moshe Shahal, Alignment faction chairman, has succeeded in his demand that the plenum next week debate his bill to guarantee the freedom of meetings, assemblies and processions. Shahal noted that his bill, identical with a draft tabled many years ago by former Likud MK Yohanan Bader, would remove from the police's hands the authority to license meetings, assemblies and processions.

Shahal said his bill was urgent in view of the alleged intention of certain Likud MKs to curb freedom of speech in the wake of Operation Peace for Galilee.

Uzi Baram (Alignment-Labour) charged that Michael Kleiner (Likud-Herut) had accused the Peace Now movement of taking Saudi money to finance its operations, on the basis of forged material put out by Iranian intelligence to blacken the Saudi name.

Baram said Kleiner had let himself be made a tool in a campaign by Iran to cause ferment in Saudi Arabia which would make it easy for Iran to invade the Gulf sheikhdoms.

Baram said: "Kleiner got a forged document from an Iranian intelligence agent."

Mother seeks to prove soldier son's suicide

The bereaved mother of a young soldier who died in unclear circumstances two years ago has applied to the High Court of Justice to order the reopening of the Israel Defence Forces investigation into her son's death. In effect, she is seeking to prove that IDF bureaucracy drove her son to suicide.

Supreme Court Justice Dov Levine has set a hearing of the woman's petition by a panel of three judges and has summoned Attorney General Yitzhak Zamir to testify. The IDF has not yet filed a defence brief.

Rav-Turay Yosef Yona, 20, was killed in his home by a shot from his service pistol in June 1980. IDF investigators determined that the circumstances of his death could be explained by suicide, but in the absence of witnesses would not rule out the possibility that Yona shot himself by accident.

Military prosecutor Rav-Seren Uri Shalom wrote in the original investigation file that Yona "took his expulsion from a ship master's course very hard, and carried with him the feeling that he had been done an injustice. Ever since his expulsion he did not find a place for himself in the army and was alienated from the units to which he was transferred."

Yona began his military career as a cadet in a military academy, from which he was graduated into the army with every prospect for a long and successful career as an officer, writes his mother's attorney in the High Court petition.

Because of his "very high motivation," attorney Rafael Glass notes, Yona first volunteered for pilot training. After he was rejected as a pilot, he tried the navy course and was dropped after 18 months. He then tried to volunteer for the paratrooper corps, but was rejected. Ultimately he was transferred to the intelligence corps, where, in the words of his family, his duties consisted of shredding and burning classified documents. The Yona family's petition to the High Court followed a previous appeal to IDF ombudsman Rav-Aluf (res.) Haim Laskov, who told them he could not — under military law — interfere in a matter already investigated by an examining officer. He referred them to the chief military prosecutor, who refused to reopen the investigation.

Yona's mother refuses to consider the possibility her son killed himself by accident and insists on proving publicly that his "failure to advance on the IDF ladder of command" drove him to kill himself.

Among the questions included in the petition are why Yona was dropped from the ship master's course; why he was given a period of mental labour following his dismissal from the course; why he was rejected from several combat units with a top health profile of 97; and (perhaps crucial), why he was denied permission to talk with a mental health officer. TEHIYA MEETS to the government by undertaking to vote with it on confidence motions and other crucial votes.

Since then there has been a great shift of opinion in the party in favour of stronger links with the coalition. As anti-war activity on the left of the political spectrum increased, so the mood in Tehiya began to change.

The outstanding division in Tehiya, according to party insiders, is whether the party ought to enter the coalition immediately without any pre-conditions or demands, as Cohen proposes, or whether, as MK Hanan Porat suggests, the party merely ought to announce that it is ready to open negotiations about joining the coalition.

It should, according to Porat, present a set of demands and demand representation for Ne'eman in the cabinet.

Likud sources reported yesterday that they know of two demands that Tehiya might make in the event negotiations get underway: the Gaza, Judea, and Samaria settlements be expanded and that Israeli law be extended to them.

Tehiya and Likud sources indicate that there would be no opposition to co-opting Ne'eman into the cabinet. He might first be made a minister-without-portfolio and later a ministry for science and technology might be created for him.

If Tehiya does successfully negotiate its entry into the coalition, the government would find itself with a comfortable majority, controlling 64 of the 120 Knesset seats. This is after the two MKs of the defunct Telem list have already joined the coalition benches.

SHULTZ ON PALESTINIANS

marines would be worthwhile if it can be done "properly and safely" and "if we can remove the PLO fighters from Beirut and get them somewhere else." He said that Syria was the most likely country to take them, although it hasn't yet agreed.

Shultz said he regretted Israel's invasion of Lebanon because it has caused "this tremendous amount of bloodshed" when a peaceful solution should have been possible.

He said that the Lebanese government apparently has sent an official request to Washington for U.S. troops to help evacuate the approximately 8,000-strong PLO forces from Beirut.

He said that he hopes they can do the evacuation job in 30 days, but the problem remains of where the armed PLO men would go.

However, State Department official spokesman Dean Fischer, referring to Shultz's statement about the troop request, said later that was not yet the case.

"No country seems anxious to have the PLO fighters there," he said, adding there probably "was a message" in that fact.

Percy said Syria was the likely destination, even though the Damascus regime has expressed reservations. Shultz concurred.

The Senate chairman, who has emerged in recent weeks as a sharp critic of the Israeli government, raised the matter of Israel's use of U.S.-supplied cluster bombs, in apparent violation of U.S. law. The senator said Prime Minister Menachem Begin, during his appearance before the panel three weeks ago, had promised to reply to questions involving cluster bomb use, but so far no reply had reached Washington.

Percy urged Shultz to take up this question forcefully with Israel, and the secretary-designate promised that he would. Shultz called it "a very important problem."

In his carefully prepared opening statement, Shultz referred to the "terrible human tragedy" in Lebanon. He recalled that he had visited Beirut in 1974, when it was still "a beautiful city." But even then, he was stunned by the presence of so many Palestinian refugees.

Carefully staying within the outlines of existing Reagan administration policy, Shultz said that the Lebanese must be allowed to "govern themselves." He said the "armed PLO" had left Lebanon in "disrepair."

Shultz flatly warned, however, that the U.S. cannot accept "the loss of life" in Lebanon. He said the

Seamen to end boycott of ships

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — The Marine Officers' Union has agreed to end its counter-boycott against Greek ships after learning yesterday that the seafarers in Greek ports are expected to call off their boycott of Israeli ships tonight.

Union representatives informed Uzi Landau, director-general of the Transport Ministry, of this decision at a meeting in Jerusalem yesterday.

However, the union's counter-boycott took effect for the first time yesterday against a passenger ship when the Golden Vergina arrived for a one-day visit with more than 200 tourists, mainly from Britain and West Germany.

The ship stayed out in the bay when port pilots, who are union members, refused to take her into port.

Harbour launches eventually took the passengers ashore for a day of sight-seeing and returned them to the ship in the same way.

Over 50 passenger cars were unloaded in the bay onto a large barge provided by the port management.

Local press criticizes foreign war coverage

TEL AVIV (UPI) — Israel's National Press Union protested yesterday to the International Organization of Journalists over the "severe distortion of facts" by foreign correspondents covering the fighting in Lebanon.

The letter charged that "facts were not checked with the best possible source, as required by journalistic ethics. Consequently, there was a severe distortion of facts in reports by the media."

By example, the letter pointed to early reports of 600,000 refugees among the Lebanese. "A superficial check would have shown that the population in that region numbered less than the alleged number of refugees," the letter said.

Shinui MKs query Ehrlich on misinformation

By ARYEH RUBINSTEIN
Post Knesset Reporter

Did Deputy Prime Minister Shimon Peres misinform Shinui MKs Amnon Rubinstein and Mordechai Virshupsky on June 22 when they asked him to confirm or deny news media reports of an IDF offensive that day in the Bahadour sector of the Beirut-Damascus road and was Ehrlich himself misled?

In a parliamentary question yesterday, Rubinstein said Ehrlich told them then that the chief of staff had informed him about an hour before that there had been "no movement" in the area and that all that had happened in the central sector was an artillery duel which had started the day before.

Ehrlich allegedly added that no cabinet or cabinet committee had met that day to authorize the army to initiate an action, despite the cease-fire.

But, said Rubinstein, it soon transpired that media reports were correct and that the IDF had won control of the sector and of a 25-kilometre section of the road.

Rubinstein asked: "Who decided on the offensive? Had Ehrlich taken any action to determine who was responsible for the misinformation he had been given, and who had paid, or would pay, the penalty for that?"

Ehrlich replied: "The IDF carried out no offensive, but responded to shooting begun by the Syrian army. The information I received was correct."

Rubinstein: "I didn't ask who started. I accept your version that the Syrians did. I asked about the information you gave us that the media reports were incorrect and that there had been no advance of IDF forces other than an artillery duel."

Ehrlich: "Your question did not give the precise content of our conversation. I replied in accordance with what I told you — that the IDF did not attack or set any goals for itself, but defended itself and responded by shooting. The action afterwards was a result of defence."

Navon opposes Betar anthem at ceremony for Jabotinsky

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

President Yitzhak Navon is due to ask Minister without Portfolio Yitzhak Moda'i that the Betar anthem not be played when the president is present at next week's state memorial service for Ze'ev Jabotinsky.

Sources in Beit Hanassi said Navon views it as a matter of principle that neither the Betar anthem nor any other "political song" be played at an official state occasion. They added that if Tehezeke, the Labour Party anthem, were scheduled to be played at a state ceremony, he would oppose that as well.

A couple of years ago, the Begin government decided to make the annual service for Jabotinsky, the Revisionist leader who died in 1940, a state ceremony. Last year, when Navon attended, he asked Prime Minister Menachem Begin that the Betar hymn not be played during his presence. But Begin argued that the anthem was a "national song."

Navon will suggest to Moda'i, minister in charge of the committee on symbols and ceremonies, that the Betar anthem be played after he leaves. The ceremony will be held on July 20 at 5.30 p.m. on Mt. Herzl in Jerusalem, at the graves of Jabotinsky and his family.

Begin can't bring Mapam to court

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV — Prime Minister Menachem Begin explained to Mapam leaders yesterday that he cannot initiate any legal proceedings against them for an anti-war circular which reached front-line soldiers in Lebanon.

Begin was responding to a telegram from Mapam MK Dov Zaldin, calling on the prime minister to prosecute Mapam. Begin stressed he was replying before actually receiving the telegram.

"I learned of its content from the press. This must be a new code of etiquette whereby telegrams and letters are publicized in the press before they have even had a chance of reaching their destination," Begin wrote Zaldin.

Begin expressed "astonishment" that he was asked to institute legal proceedings. "Please note that this is not one of the duties of a prime minister in a democratic state. Such is only the custom in totalitarian regimes," he wrote.

Begin stated that only the attorney-general has the authority to decide on whether legal measures would be taken or not.

Acting Attorney-General Meir Gabbai is due to make an official decision on the matter in a few days.

The circulars were entitled "Position Paper Number 1" and are issued by the Mapam information team.

National Religious Party MK Haim Druckman yesterday noted statements made at a press conference by Issam Sartawi, a PLO leader, who, speaking on behalf of Yasser Arafat, said one of the biggest achievements of the PLO can point to is the Mapam circular, and anti-war activities inside Israel.

The Mapam spokeswoman said yesterday her party's attitude to the PLO was clearly stated in the position paper — that the PLO is a terrorist organization intent on destroying Israel — it is Israel's right and duty, to fight the PLO and hit it without scruple. "Any different presentation of Mapam's attitude to PLO is a distortion," the spokeswoman stated.

Lapid promises full colour on TV soon

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Israel TV will transmit full colour broadcasting in the near future, Broadcasting Authority director-general Yosef Lapid, told Communications Minister Mordechai Zipori yesterday.

The minister had written Lapid a few weeks ago asking what was holding up the implementation of full colour programming, which had been due many months ago.

Lapid also asked the minister for a mobile telephone exchange for use in next month's special TV programme to collect funds for the Israel Defence Fund.

Tear-gas used to disperse Nablus protest

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Soldiers used tear-gas to break up a demonstration by stone-throwing youths in Nablus late Monday afternoon, military sources confirmed yesterday. These sources denied, however, that the soldiers had fired shots into the air as reported by East Jerusalem newspapers.

The youths, reportedly numbering several hundred, chanted slogans against the invasion of Lebanon and in support of the PLO and they stoned passing military traffic. An unspecified number have been detained.

Security forces also detained three Hebron political figures on Monday night, all identified in the past as having pro-PLO sympathies. According to one source, they have been trying to organize support for the Palestinians in Lebanon.

The three men, Kamar Harwish Natshe, a former director of the local agricultural department, Adnan Abidat, who ran social services during the Jordanian administration, and Husam Bader, who was director of education during the same period, are reportedly being held in the Fara'a detention centre in the Jordan valley. Security sources last night would only confirm "several arrests" recently in the West Bank.

PLO prisoners tell of good treatment

Jerusalem Post Staff

Several PLO fighters and security detainees being held by Israel said yesterday that they are receiving adequate care and fair treatment.

Interviewed on Israel Radio's English News programme, they said they receive enough food, medicine and cigarettes, and spend their days sitting around.

Israel Radio's Arabic service, is broadcasting messages from them to their families in neighbouring Arab states in the same way as Army Radio broadcasts messages from Israeli soldiers in Lebanon to their families at home.

Israel is holding some 6,000 prisoners captured in Lebanon, both PLO fighters and detainees caught without identity papers, Israel Radio said. Innocent detainees are released after being cleared.

Israel allowed International Red Cross officials to visit injured prisoners this week, and next week will allow them to see other detainees.

The reporter who interviewed the prisoners said each receives a shirt, trousers, underwear, boots, two blankets, a towel, a mess tin and a spoon. Their camp, which is not unlike an army field base, was ringed with barbed wire, he said. The location of the camp was not disclosed.

Ahmed Mohammed Ismail, one of two doctors being held at the camp, said he had encountered no problems in the camp.

Archeologists accept terms to end City of David dispute

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter

In an apparent solution to the City of David excavation controversy, the archeologists have agreed not to excavate the full extent of the area allotted to them under the Education Ministry license.

The agreement was reached yesterday morning at the excavation site outside the Old City of Jerusalem. Present were a high level delegation including Education Minister Ze'ev Hamner, Agudat Yisrael leader Avraham Shapira and Professor Yigael Yadin.

Last year the digging at what was claimed to be a medieval Jewish cemetery aroused a bitter controversy between Orthodox and ultra-Orthodox circles on one side, and secular Jews and academics on the other.

According to the agreement, surveys provided by the attorney-general's office will mark a path, since obliterated by the excavations, to the east of which the cemetery is said to lie. According to Dr. Yigal Shilo, who directs the dig, this section is at the edge of Area G, the site under dispute.

Shilo said he hoped the arrangement will end the demonstrations and disputes. He expressed gratitude to the rabbis who served as mediators in the dispute.

However, it is still unclear whether the ultra-Orthodox elements who do not accept the authority of Agudat Yisrael, will accept the arrangement.

Hammer persuaded Ora Namir, the chairman of the Knesset Education Committee, to postpone a meeting scheduled for today about the ultra-Orthodox demonstrations at the site, with the argument that a satisfactory solution would be found.

Sammy Davis Jr. shows his support by being here

By MICHAEL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV — "Israel is my religious homeland," said Sammy Davis Jr., who arrived yesterday to entertain Israeli soldiers.

Davis, guest of the Soldiers' Welfare Association and El Al, said he was an apolitical figure, but his being here was a statement of support in itself. "I am 56 years old, and I hope to live to see the day when children of all colours and nations can play in Tel Aviv, Beirut or anywhere else, together, without fear," he told the press at the Tel Aviv Hilton Hotel.

Davis is due to visit troops and wounded soldiers today. He said he would "do anything they ask me to." He also intends to appear before wounded Lebanese citizens and visit Lebanon.

Davis will be the guest of honour tonight at a party for wounded soldiers at the Hilton, organized by Simha Holtzberg and the Soldiers' Welfare Association.

Davis, for whom this is the fifth visit to Israel, converted to Judaism some 30 years ago. He claimed he has suffered from anti-Semitism from both Jews and non-Jews.

French film actor Eddie Constantine, remembered for his roles in French gangster films in the fifties, is in Israel as guest of Samuel Flatto-Sharon.

Peace Now agrees to suspend activity

By ISRAEL AMRANI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Peace Now has decided to suspend all public activity against the war in Lebanon until the situation in West Beirut clears up, a movement spokesman told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

Police investigations chief Yehzekel Carthy told the Post yesterday that MK Michael Kleiner had not submitted an official complaint against Peace Now which, he alleges, receives funding from the Saudis, but only an "information item."

Carthy also said that Kleiner had not given the police the names of any sources, adding that Kleiner had no evidence to support his claim. "The police always treat any information they receive seriously, even if it looks imaginary," Carthy said.

Meanwhile, another group protesting the war in Lebanon made its public debut yesterday at a press conference in Beit Agron in Jerusalem. The conference drew three foreign television crews and some 15 foreign correspondents.

Calling itself Yesh Gvul ("There's a Limit"), the group is made up of 112 reserve and regular IDF soldiers who have sent a letter to the prime minister and the defence minister calling on them to end the war in Lebanon and send the soldiers home.

Yehuda Meltzer, a Tel Aviv University professor of philosophy and member of the group, accused the government of committing war crimes in Lebanon. A spokesman for the group immediately dissociated Yesh Gvul from this charge.

Savior favours Knesset recess

Post Knesset Correspondent

Knesset Speaker Menachem Savidor yesterday announced opposition to keeping the Knesset in session after the start of the summer recess at the end of this month.

Among the seven reasons he listed for his objection, Savidor said

Ivtzan: police won't estimate crowd size

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Police Inspector-General Rav-Nitzav Arye Ivtzan yesterday rejected an appeal by Broadcasting Authority director-general Yosef Lapid, that the police resume providing the press with official estimates of crowd sizes at demonstrations.

"The police does not intend to burden itself with the duty of publishing estimates of participants in demonstrations or processions, and by doing so to get involved in a public debate with the party which does not like the police estimate," Ivtzan told Lapid.

Lapid's request followed a controversy over estimates by Israel Television and Radio and newspapers of the number of participants in the Tel Aviv anti-war rally organized 11 days ago by Peace Now. The 100,000 estimate reported by TV and others was disputed by supporters of the government.

Lapid wrote that the police have been found to be the most accurate in estimating the size of crowds at demonstrations.

Two held in murder of diamond dealer

Jerusalem Post Reporter

NETANYA — Two suspects have been arrested in connection with the murder of local diamond polishing plant owner Shlomo Gabai last Friday.

Remanded yesterday for five and three days, respectively, were Mordechai Gali, 21, of Kfar Yona, and Avigdor Cohen, 35, of Netanya.

Police Inspector-General Rav-Nitzav Arye Ivtzan said he considers the murder of Gabai, 37, to represent a growing trend of pointless violent crimes. Gabai was not armed when he was robbed and murdered.

Halpert insists on deadline for halting of Sabbath flights

Post Knesset Correspondent

Aguda MK Shmuel Halpert, who rocked the coalition boat on Monday with his threat to resign from the coalition because the government had broken its commitments, demanded yesterday that El Al stop Sabbath flights entirely on or before August 2.

Halpert wrote to Prime Minister Menachem Begin, reminding him that the cabinet had set a three months deadline for Sabbath closure on May 2.

Halpert's second initiative in two days is worrying his three Aguda colleagues in the Knesset since he has always played the role neophyte so far.

Post poll: most Israelis are satisfied with war reporting

By MARK SEGAL
Post Political Correspondent

TEL AVIV — Most Israelis are satisfied with the information they receive on the war and consider it to be credible, according to a Jerusalem Post poll, conducted towards the end of June.

The poll was conducted by the Modi'in Ezrachi Research Institute among a sample of 1,236 adults. There was an under-representation of men between the ages of 18 and 39 in the sample, according to institute director Sara Shemer.

Just over one third of Israelis think the information they receive is not entirely reliable, the poll showed. The overwhelming majority of Israelis rely on Israeli Radio and Galei Zahal for their information on the war, with Israel TV coming second as a source of news and the newspapers coming third. Few relied on informal sources and even less on foreign radio and TV.

When asked: "How, in your opinion, was the information supplied to the public about the war?" the responses were: Not enough — 25.5 percent; Sufficient — 60.5 percent; Too much — 8.2 percent; and Undecided — 1.8 percent.

A second question: "How do you evaluate the information given to the public during the war?" was answered: Largely credible — 64.4 percent; Fairly credible, partly not — 28.5 percent; Largely unreliable — 4.5 percent; and Undecided — 2.6 percent.

Reservists go abroad to get volunteers for border farms

By ILAN CHAIM
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The second part of a 12-man delegation of Israel Defence Forces reservists arrived in New York yesterday to recruit volunteers among North American Jewish youth to help out in settlements along Israel's northern border this summer.

An advance group of four of the emissaries — most of whom fought in Lebanon — arrived Sunday, led by programme organizer Seren (res.) Meir Emdor. Despite the fact that he is a well-known Gush Emunim and Stop the Withdrawal from Sinai movement official, Emdor told The Jerusalem Post that the volunteer programme is "entirely apolitical."

Sponsored by the Midreshet Hagolan field school and Golan Heights and Upper Galilee settlements, the four-to-six-week programme is to combine agricultural work and guard duty at border settlements short of manpower due to Operation Peace for Galilee. It aims to recruit Jewish men and women aged 18 and over to begin August.

Weapons training for guard duty will be provided by the IDF as a special course for the participants. The IDF will also provide one of the founders of the settlement corps. The IDF movement, known as Shomer, is a religious movement.

The cost of the programme will be borne by the Prime Minister's Office and the Ministry of Defence and Education. Emdor said, Room and board will be free, as will tours of the country. The round-trip air fare from New York on El Al will be subsidized and will cost $400 per participant.

The volunteer programme is an extension of a similar effort Emdor organized last year, which brought 40 participants here. The organizers hope that the country's need during the war in Lebanon will encourage "many thousands" to volunteer, and that many such volunteers will decide to settle in Israel.

Sunglasses can delay cataracts

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV — Wearing sunglasses can delay the development of cataracts, the number one cause of blindness, according to a study at the Morris and Gabriela Goldschlager Eye Institute at Tel Aviv University.

Professor Michael Belkin, who conducted the study, said it has long been assumed that ultraviolet radiation plays some part in the development of cataracts.

In a climate like ours, Belkin said, people should wear sunglasses not only for comfort and fashion but, more importantly, to delay the development of cataracts.

Iran rejects UN resolution on ending war with Iraq

LONDON (Reuters). — Iran yesterday rejected a UN Security Council resolution calling for a peaceful solution to the Gulf war and pledged to impose its terms on the Iraqi government.

Prime Minister Hossein Musavi told Teheran Radio the unanimous resolution, adopted Monday night, was an attempt to save Iraqi President Saddam Hussein whose armed forces have suffered a series of setbacks in the past 10 months.

Musavi said Iran would continue the 22-month-old Gulf war until all its conditions had been met by Baghdad and would ignore any UN decisions for an international force to oversee a cease-fire.

"If the Security Council issues 10 more resolutions, we cannot drop our legitimate demands."

"Saddam's regime must abandon our territory unconditionally, pay war reparations and be condemned."

In this case the war will end," Musavi told the radio, monitored by Reuters.

The Security Council resolution called for a cease-fire, an immediate end to all military operations, withdrawal of forces to international borders and sending UN observers to oversee the cease-fire and the withdrawal.

"The Security Council's vote is a vote of confidence in Saddam by the U.S. and the Soviet Union... we do not need foreign forces on our borders. These forces would do better to protect the interests of the superpowers somewhere else," Musavi said in response to the resolution.

In Washington, Administration officials expressed concern over the situation, but a spokesman said that President Reagan remains hopeful the Iranians will not mount an invasion.

Gulf states seek adoption of UN sanctions on Israel

BAHRAIN (Reuters). — Saudi Arabia and five other Gulf petroleum producers urged the five permanent members of the UN Security Council yesterday to apply sanctions against Israel for refusing to pull out of Lebanon.

They also asked the U.S. not to hinder the execution of UN resolutions on the matter, a conference statement said.

Foreign ministers of the six states, which form the Gulf Cooperation Council, reaffirmed their support for Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity and for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The statement, carried by the official Saudi press agency, came at the end of a three-day conference of the ministers from Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) in the Saudi summer capital of Taif.

The ministers denounced what they called Israel's war of annihilation in Lebanon.

The statement said the council strongly condemned the U.S. for vetoing implementation of UN resolutions against Israel.

But it did not mention a call by Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba for an Arab summit in Tunisia this week to consider possible action to save Palestinian fighters trapped by Israeli forces in West Beirut.

Sheik pays $1.56m. bill, then sues hotel for $1b.

MIAMI BEACH, Florida (AP). — Saudi Arabian Sheik Mohammed al-Fassi paid his hotel bill with a $1.56 million cashier's cheque on Monday, and then filed a $1 billion countersuit against the Hollywood Diplomat Hotel, authorities said.

An attorney for the billionaire sheik said the cheque was given to hotel lawyers at a hearing in the Broward Circuit Court. The sheik and his entourage of 75 had made the hotel their home since last winter.

When the cheque cleared, the hotel's suit against the sheik ended, and members of al-Fassi's group began clearing an estimated $15m.

worth of valuables from the hotel. The sheik's jewels, cars and furniture had been held in the hotel in custody of the Broward sheriff's office as collateral against the debt, said the sheik's attorney, Ellis Rubin.

Al-Fassi, 27, was arrested a week ago, and charged with defrauding an innkeeper, a third-degree felony. The Diplomat filed a civil suit last Thursday, after which the court seized the valuables.

The sheik's countersuit claims $300m. in compensatory damages, and $700m. in punitive damages are due him.

British actor Kenneth More dies

LONDON (UPI). — Kenneth More, one of Britain's most accomplished stage, screen and television actors, died on Monday night. He was 67.

More was named film actor of the year in 1954 by the British Film Academy for his role in the comedy Doctor in the House. But he was just as effective in stage dramas such as The Winslow Boy and he was one of the stars of the hit television series The Forsythe Saga.

China slams U.S. supporters of Taiwan

PEKING (UPI). — China said yesterday that U.S. conservatives are trying to torpedo delicate Sino-American talks on the Taiwan arms dispute and roll back relations to the cold war era.

The conservative lobbyists in Washington are "stirring up trouble with all their might," said a commentary in Peoples Daily, the newspaper of the Chinese Communist Party.

Bedroom visitor called queen his 'girlfriend'

LONDON (AP). — A prowler who awoke Queen Elizabeth II in her bedroom was clutching a bloody, broken ashtray and had made at least 12 secret night visits to Buckingham Palace to see his "girlfriend, Elizabeth Regina," British press reports said yesterday.

The Daily Express, the London newspaper that broke the story of the palace break-in, said the intruder was living out an amorous fantasy about the 56-year-old monarch. The man's father said his son had entered the palace at least three times since May 1.

In the latest incident, the Express said, the queen was awakened at 3 a.m. Friday by a man in a dirty T-shirt and blue jeans sitting on the end of her bed with blood dripping from his hand onto the bed covers.

The queen talked to him for 10 minutes to calm him down before summoning a footman to take him away, the newspaper said. She was not hurt.

Police allege that Michael Fagan, a 31-year-old drifter, evaded 43 soldiers, 24 police, 350 palace staff, dog patrols, surveillance cameras, electronic listening devices and other security equipment.

"He thinks so much of the queen," Ivy Fagan, the man's mother, was quoted by the Daily Mail. "I can imagine him just wanting to simply talk and say hello and discuss problems."

The Express and the Sun newspapers said Fagan, married with six children, had made at least 12 night visits to Buckingham Palace.

"I'm sure he had several goes, and he made it into the palace at least three times that we know of," said Fagan's father. "There could have been many more."

On each occasion, he would leave his wife, Christine, late at night and return home at 6 a.m., saying he had been to visit his girlfriend in southwest London, the father said.

"When questioned by his mother and myself, my son said that his girlfriend was an older woman, married and had four children. He called her Elizabeth Regina," he said. Queen Elizabeth has four children.

Part of the high wall surrounding Buckingham Palace shows a formidable array of spikes, barbed wire and security listening devices. Members of Parliament have demanded an explanation how an intruder entered the queen's bedroom while she was there. (UPI telephoto)

Deal reportedly reached on Namibian independence

WINDHOEK, South West Africa/Namibia (UPI). — Frontline African states and the South West African Peoples Organization (SWAPO) have accepted a "package" deal for the territory's independence, and negotiations are expected to reach a climax within the next 10 days, the newspaper Die Republikein said yesterday.

The newspaper, official mouthpiece of the interim Namibian government, the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, quoted senior diplomatic sources as saying the deal was accepted in New York last week in talks between SWAPO and representatives of the Western Five (West Germany, Britain, France, Canada and the U.S.).

Die Republikein said the withdrawal of Cuban from Angola, which South Africa set as a precondition to a settlement, was "apparently precluded from the latest package deal."

4 killed in train wreck

AALTER, Belgium (AP). — An express train heading for the Belgian coast flashed past a red stop light and slammed into the back of a commuter train in the station of this Flemish town yesterday killing at least four people, authorities said.

Peking radio item hails Sino-Soviet past friendship

PEKING (Reuters). — Peking Radio has broadcast an interview praising Sino-Soviet friendship in an unusually warm reference to links between the two countries embittered by over 20 years of hostility.

The radio quoted Karin (no first name mentioned), a member of the Uighur minority from Chinese Central Asia, talking nostalgically in an interview on its Russian-language service of a visit he paid to the Soviet Union in 1965.

Peking and Moscow have been bitter enemies since 1960, when thousands of Soviet advisers pulled out of China and the government here attacked its northern neighbour, saying it had abandoned communism and aimed to dominate the world.

In recent weeks, however, there have been indications of a slight thaw, although diplomats agree there is no possibility of a revival of the close relationship that existed in the 1950s.

COMMUNIST. — General Secretary of the outlawed Nepal Communist Party, Tulsī Lal Amatya, was arrested at Katmandu, about 110 km. south of Katmandu, Nepalese authorities said yesterday, for allegedly engaging in party activities.

Somalia asks UN to condemn Ethiopian attacks

MOGADISHU (Reuters). — Somalia has sent a message to the UN protesting against what it called savage Ethiopian attacks on its territory in the past 10 days, Somali radio reported yesterday.

The radio said Somali Foreign Minister Abdurrahman Jama Barre sent a message to UN Secretary-General Javier de Perez Cuellar on Monday appealing to all member states of the world body to condemn the attacks and to demand that they cease.

Somalia has accused Ethiopian air and ground forces of attacking towns and villages in the Galduduud and Mudug regions of central Somalia, which border the Ogaden Desert. The two countries fought a war over the sparsely populated Ogaden region in the late 1970s.

Ethiopia has remained silent on the Somali accusations, but on Monday an Ethiopian-backed Somali guerrilla group seeking to overthrow President Siad Barre said it was responsible for the attacks, describing the incidents as a "purely internal matter."

In Nairobi, the Ethiopian Embassy denied its country's forces invaded neighbouring Somalia, describing the clashes as "purely and simply an internal matter" between Somalis.

Germany and Russia sign billion dollar pipeline deal

MOSCOW (UPI). — The Soviet Union yesterday signed a deal with German banks to finance a large portion of the proposed multi-billion dollar natural gas pipeline between Siberia and Western Europe.

A statement by Deutsche Bank, the largest partner in the agreement, said the contract means financing is now available for the equivalent of $1.1 billion worth of German exports, with an option of going up to $1.6 billion by the end of the year.

"The final volume of the financing depends on the extent to which further delivery contracts are awarded to firms from the Federal Republic of Germany," the Deutsche Bank statement said.

The bank said the German financing will cover only 85 per cent of the contract value, despite the Soviets' current shortage of hard currency. While the terms weren't announced, German sources said the loans will stretch over an 8-year period at an interest rate of 7.8 per cent.

Germany is the largest Western European country to have committed itself to the 5,000-kilometre project. Other countries involved are France, Italy, Austria, Switzerland and Belgium.

Vatican asks banking experts to check financial dealings

VATICAN CITY (Reuters). — The Vatican asked yesterday it had called in three international banking experts to examine relations between the Vatican Bank and Italy's financially troubled Banco Ambrosiano.

It was the Holy See's first reaction to mounting pressure from the Italian government for the Vatican Bank to cooperate in investigations of Banco Ambrosiano's financial problems, triggered by the fight and subsequent death of its former president Roberto Calvi.

Calvi was found hanging from London's Blackfriars bridge last month.

The crisis at Ambrosiano, banking sources said, was set off by the Vatican's refusal to take responsibility for some $1.27 billion lent by Ambrosiano's Latin American subsidiaries to Panamanian finance companies on the strength of letters of patronage issued by the head of the Vatican Bank, American Archbishop Paul Marcinkus.

The Vatican said it had called in three international bankers "to examine the situation and to provide suggestions and advice."

It named the three as Joseph Brennan, president of the Emigrant Savings Bank of New York, Italian banker Carlo Cerutti and Philippe de Wech, president of the Union des Banques Suisses.

The announcement was a major departure from tradition for the Vatican, which has always maintained complete secrecy over its financial operations.

Fugitive Solidarity leaders ask moratorium on protests

WARSAW (Reuters). — Underground Solidarity leaders have called for a suspension of strikes and demonstrations until the end of July, partly to ease the way for a planned visit by the pope, according to a Solidarity leaflet released yesterday.

The appeal, signed by fugitive leaders of the suspended free trade union in Warsaw, Gdansk, Krakow and Wrocław, said the gesture also shows the readiness of the underground activists to reach an understanding with the Communist rulers.

It said the signatories expected a move of conciliation from the authorities to show their will to open a dialogue, and this should include release of political internees and an amnesty for those punished under martial law rules imposed last December 13.

If there were no such response from the authorities the underground would be forced to resume its resistance, perhaps by staging a general strike.

The appeal, dated June 26, was made available on the day marking the start of the eighth month of martial law.

Two black flags were hung outside the university yesterday morning, but there were no other obvious signs of protest in the capital.

Church and diplomatic sources here believe the government of General Wojciech Jaruzelski is planning to release the bulk of the about 2,500 internees held in camps and prisons throughout Poland on July 22, national day.

Poll says U.S. foreign relations slipping

LOS ANGELES (AP). — Most Americans believe that U.S. relations with the rest of the world have deteriorated since Ronald Reagan became president, a new poll says.

The poll, published in yesterday's editions of the Los Angeles Times, said Americans believe the Reagan administration's relationships with Europe, Latin America, the Soviet Union, Japan, Israel and the Arab countries have worsened in the last 18 months.

Sixty-seven per cent of those polled said they thought relations with Latin America had suffered because of U.S. support for Great Britain during the Falkland Islands war.

Two-thirds of those asked said America should have stayed neutral during the dispute, 25 per cent agreed with the support of Great Britain. Only two per cent said the U.S. should have sided with Argentina, according to the poll.

It concluded most Americans believe the nation's relations with both the Arabs and the Israelis have suffered because of the continuing conflict in the Middle East.

Poll shows Mitterrand losing support

PARIS (Reuters). — President Francois Mitterrand's popularity has sunk to its lowest level this year, according to an opinion poll in the pro-government daily Le Matin yesterday.

Thirty-eight per cent of those questioned said they disapproved of his performance, compared with 29 per cent in June, while those who approved fell to 53 per cent from 59 per cent.

Le Matin attributed the fall in the government's popularity to the wage and price freeze announced in June, annual inflation of about 14 per cent and the recent devaluation of the French franc.

JAPAN - IRAQ. — Japan is considering yen loans and export credits totalling some $25 million to Iraq to supply medical equipment for a building programme of 15 new hospitals, Trade and Industry Ministry officials said in Tokyo yesterday.

Cautious captain ruins Test

LONDON (Reuters). — England captain Bob Willis gave India no chance of expressing their batting talents as the third and final cricket test faded to a draw at the Oval here yesterday.

Willis, determined to protect England's hold on the series by virtue of their seven-wicket victory at Lord's in the opening test, followed by a draw in the second, set India a monumental and almost impossible target of 376 in 160 minutes. England batted well into the afternoon session before Willis declared their second innings at 191 for three.

With the tourists naturally unable to mount a serious challenge — they reached 111 for three in reply — and with England's bowlers struggling against the clock and a good batting pitch, the hosts won the series and thus duly avenged their 1-0 defeat in India earlier this year.

Chris Tavare and Allan Lamb took their second wicket stand to 82 before South Africa-born Lamb fell to a well-flighted delivery from Dilip Doshi for 45. David Gower and Tavare then added 97 more runs together before Gower, on 45, sent a return catch to Suru Nayak. Tavare was unbeaten on 75 when the declaration was finally made when Ravi Shastri, the promoted Nayak and Dilip Vengsarkar all fell cheaply, with India on 45 for three. Willis must have entertained second thoughts about his dull and unimaginative captaincy.

Gundappa Viswanath steered India away from danger with another fine innings of 75 not out.

In country cricket, Middlesex beat the champions, Nottinghamshire, by an innings and 15 runs.

Soccer stars breach boycott

LONDON (Reuters). — Argentine world soccer cup stars Osvaldo Ardiles and Mario Kempes will be among 18 top professionals taking part in the six match tour of South Africa, a British spokesman for the organizers said yesterday.

The tour, to begin in Cape Town on Friday, is the latest in a series of breaches of sporting boycotts of South Africa.

Apart from Ardiles and Kempes among those named for the squad are former British international Mick Channon and Brian Greenhoff.

European XV in Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG (AP). — Twenty European rugby players arrived here yesterday to play three games despite British government protests that the South African tour would breach a five-year-old anti-apartheid ban on rugby contacts.

The squad includes players from England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland and France.

ANYONE WHO thinks that the Japanese are not individualists has yet to meet "Bill" Sasanuma, showman and chef.

In Israel to teach the staff of the Jerusalem King Solomon Sheraton Hotel the finer points of Japanese cooking for their new Japanese restaurant which is to open next month, Sasanuma may be the product of a rigid system, but he has certainly broken out.

At a pre-opening sample meal to which the hotel invited me, it was a little difficult at first to talk to him. He was busy cooking and I was busy eating. The scene was one of the teppanyaki tables in the restaurant, which resembles a rather grandiose steakhouse. Other facilities include smaller kappo tables, where the clients can cook their own meals with the help of a hostess, and the formal tatami room for private parties.

If not the first kosher Japanese restaurant in the world, it is at least the first glatt kosher Japanese eating place, thus nicely enhancing Jerusalem's role as a haven for the kosher gourmet. In addition to Japanese food, the kosher diner will now be able to try Chinese, Italian and French haute cuisine, all within a radius of a few blocks.

The world's first kosher Japanese restaurant is in New York, operated by the daughter of Japanese converts to Judaism, who also stars in the floorshow, which of course includes the line, "So sorry, you don't look Jewish."

Sasanuma, of course, looks very Japanese, but he has evidently picked up a bit of the P.T. Barnum during the 15 years he has been in the U.S., building up a chain of Japanese steak houses.

"They wait in line for two hours to get in on Saturday night," he says, but adds that it is worth the wait. He goes back to Japan every few years to brush up on his technique.

IT WASN'T an easy thing to learn, he says. At the age of 15 he began working in a restaurant in his home town of Yokohama. For three years he followed the chef around, watching what he did, learning the ingredients that go into the secret sauces. No one has been able to get those secrets out of him in the U.S., he says, but he did reveal them to Mike Masinter, food and beverage manager of the King Solomon Sheraton, because Sasanuma "loves Israel."

If that's the case, I asked him, why doesn't he stay? For one thing, he says, he can't get the same sort of salary in Israel that he commands in America. For another, he's had trouble meeting the right Israeli girl.

Meanwhile, we have been digging into the meal, which begins with a soup and salad served together. The soup, "Japanese onion soup," is a light broth, served in a small round bowl which is, we are told, to be picked up with both hands. The salad, lettuce, tomato and cucumber, has one of the "secret" sauces. I detect lemon and onion and, perhaps, a touch of sesame oil.

The salad is also the test for those who can't and those who can't — eat with chopsticks. When the restaurant opens, there will be knives and forks for those who need them, but at this trial run, it is strictly chopsticks or starve. What makes it all much more difficult is that, unlike the Chinese, who originated chopsticks and are fairly sloppy eaters by nature, the Japanese are very neat. It just isn't done to drop your food all over the place.

Meanwhile, as I grip a lettuce leaf between the chopsticks, Sasanuma is delicately slicing

Sasanuma taps out rhythm with salt and pepper shakers and (right) shows the finer points of carving on the grill to sous-chef Shlomo Levingrand.

Showman at the grill

Cooking can be much more than drudgery in the kitchen. Haim Shapiro learns from a visiting Japanese chef.

a piece of cucumber on the grill. The cucumber is not for eating, but it does test the heat of the grill and the sharpness of the knife.

Then he goes on to slice up fresh squash (kishu) and onions. Everything in Japanese cooking is fresh, we are told. Nothing tinned, nothing frozen. That's one reason why Japanese cooking has become so popular in the U.S., where frozen food has become the rule in most restaurants. In fact, Masinter explains, the vegetables will have mushrooms as well, but the hotel could find no fresh ones.

The vegetables are fried in soy oil, seasoned with salt, pepper, sesame seeds, margarine and soy sauce. Still crisp, they are served up on a square side plate. The large round plate is for the meat, steak and veal, all glatt kosher of course.

The meat, sliced and then cubed while it grills, is also very simply seasoned. Salt and pepper and a bit of soy sauce. For those who want a bit more seasoning, there is Sasanuma's "secret" ginger sauce to dip it in if you can manage to do so with chopsticks. All this takes place with a masterful show. Salt and pepper shakers do a dance on the grill, a razor sharp knife flips up into the air.

Bits of steak jump up and land, for the most part, on the plate.

That is not traditional Japanese, Sasanuma tells us. In Japan, a chef cuts the meat slowly to show that it is very good meat and the chef has the proper respect for it. But the Americans like action.

It all looks very easy, but it is the ease that comes from years of training and experience.

THERE IS an Israeli radio programme which I enjoy immensely, but its title drives me to distraction: I have yet to meet an observant person, preparing frantically for Shabbat who has said: "Thank goodness it's Friday."

Usually on Friday, you are dishevelled, frenetic and futilely attempting to cram days of work into a few hours, in an effort to beat the clock before Shabbat begins.

Each week I resolve that the next Friday will find me organized and calm. Once or twice in my 26 years of marriage it has actually happened, so I know it's possible. In fact if members of the family don't calmly mention over Friday lunch that they have invited a few friends — or maybe a whole family — to stay for Shabbat, then you can have a Friday without tension or tears.

The secret is in planning, organization and a small amount of cheating. By that I mean offering dishes that look as though they took hours of preparation, but which can actually be assembled quickly. Ideally, you should start preparing for Shabbat on the preceding Sunday and then — if you could lock the family out for the next five days — the house could stay clean. However, if they won't co-operate with this simple request, then you'll have to clean on Wednesday; work out a menu Wednesday night; shop on Thursday; bake Thursday night; and prepare Shabbat meals on Friday.

Over the years I have become adept at quick and easy recipes that still look good enough for the Shabbat table. Here is one suggested menu:

The weak end

How awful, it's Friday, wails Dvora Waysman.

Friday night:
Chicken soup with knaidle
Roast chicken with baked pumpkin
Lokshen kugel Yerushalmi
Salads
Baked apples with non-dairy cream (parave whip)

Saturday:
Avocado and egg
Cholent with kishke
Salads
Compote of rhubarb, apple and quince.

Usually I make two large cakes — one dairy and one parave. I vary them each week, but use recipes that don't require complicated preparation. Here are two favourites:

Cream Biscuit Cake
(No Cooking)

1 large packet Petit Beurre or any plain sweet biscuit
1 packet Instant Pudding (any flavour)

1 container sweet cream

Make the instant pudding according to directions. Whip cream until stiff and blend in with the pudding. Arrange a layer of biscuits in a square pan. Cover with a layer of the cream mixture. Top with more biscuits, then another layer of cream until all are used up, ending with a cream layer. Refrigerate overnight.

Apple Cake
Make a batter from 2 c. sugar; 3 c. self-raising flour; 1 c. oil; 4 eggs; 1/2 salt; 1/2 c. orange juice. Pour half the batter into a large greased square or oblong pan. Over this layer slices of 4 large, peeled cooking apples; sprinkle 5 tsp. brown sugar and 5 tsp. cinnamon on top. Pour remaining batter on top to cover the apples. Bake one hour at 350°.

With the cakes out of the way on Thursday night, Friday is not so difficult. Chicken soup can be made from powder, following the directions on the packet, but add more flavour with onions, carrots and celery. Knaidle are quickly made from two beaten eggs and a cup of matza meal, seasoned with salt and pepper. With moist hands, form into balls and drop into the boiling soup.

The lokshen kugel, roast chicken and baked apples can all be baked at the same time — if your oven is large enough — to save fuel. For the Lokshen Kugel Yerushalmi, I boil and drain a packet of noodles (any kind). To a cup of oil add 5 tsp.

sugar and stir over flame until sugar liquifies and turns almost black. Pour quickly over noodles and mix. Add two eggs and a generous amount of black pepper. Bake covered in a slow oven for 40 minutes and uncovered for a further 10 minutes.

For dessert, core one large apple per person and, fill the hole with chopped dates, nuts, cinnamon and brown sugar. While they bake, ladle liquid over them made from water and sweet wine or fruit juice to keep them moist.

For Saturday's avocado hors d'oeuvre, mash the avocado with hard-boiled eggs, mayonnaise and chopped onion. Serve on lettuce leaves. Buy prepared kishke at the supermarket and put it on top of the cholent you've made by frying in a heavy pot onions, potatoes, carrots and diced beef or top rib. When they are brown, add lots of beans and barley which you have soaked overnight; a small can of tomato paste, a spoonful of brown sugar and water to cover. It stays on the stove or platter overnight and becomes fragrant and rich.

If your family are not fond of compote (stewing several kinds of fruit together with sugar and water), then offer fresh fruit salad. Along with vegetable salads, this can be prepared on Shabbat and helps reduce Friday's chores.

If you survive Friday, celebrate by making Shabbat a real day of rest — insist that everyone else washes the dishes, as you thankfully murmur: "Thank goodness Friday's over!"

Fat cats

More is beautiful, writes Diana Lerner.

"SLIM MAY be in, but fat is where it's at" is the slogan of a new group that has formed in America recently, which proclaims that "Fat is Beautiful." Members of the club are veterans of expensive reducing clinics, fad followers, and one-time swallows of appetite depressants, pep-up and dehydrating pills, and endless diet capsules in all colours.

They have been steamed and melted, pounded and mesmerized in Turkish baths, saunas, wax moulds, massage and hypnosis treatment centres. They are, in short, alumni of the most "effective" weight-reduction schemes and related tortures invented by man.

They are veritable success stories; each has in his or her lifetime lost about a 1000 pounds — and managed easily to find them again.

The platform of the "Fat is Beautiful Club" is clearly defined. At a meeting of the group held recently in New York, I heard a variety of persuasive arguments for joining their ever-growing numbers.

Eating is friendly. It's an easy exercise in giving into temptation. When you are not hungry, you are not under strain; your mood is better. Also, there's more of you — to cuddle and to love.

As a "Fat is Beautiful" believer, you are among the most reliable supporters of the food industry, and a welcome dinner guest who makes the poorest cook grateful because you toss off everything. You wear wide, flowing caftans — easy to grow into — and are often a trend-setter. (Fatties were the inspiration for the tent dress snapped up these days by everyone.) And you are a boon to the textile industry and thus an aid to the economy.

Inside every fat person, they say, is a thin one trying to get out. Inside you is an appetite. You enjoy every morsel of the weight-watcher's diet, for example, and gain an average of a kilo a week on it.

Fat people never show a weight gain of five kilos. No matter how much they gain, they hardly look much fatter. Thin persons show an additional gram immediately. And, no thin person is complimented as frequently about how much weight he or she has lost as is an ever-gaining overweight one.

Pretty plump people face the day with more pleasurable prospects than a menu of paste (stiffless, creamless white cheese) grass (lettuce, cabbage, celery stalks), and leather (lean meats). They do not have to endure hunger pangs that can make wall-climbers of dieters.

They cut a striking figure in the distance: yellow is yellower on them. They do not have to think about food all the time and are the envy of everyone who watches them wolf down all their goodies with unconcealed pleasure.

Fat persons live for today; tomorrow is the day they are going on a diet. And finally, most of the "Fat is Beautiful" groupies have recently found that they don't even qualify for the popular stomach operation that is guaranteed to curb appetites forever. They are just not fat enough.

The grapes of wrath

Lebanon's wine treasures remain hidden for wine columnist David Arlev.

IT IS PERHAPS somewhat lacking in taste to begin examining a neighbouring country's wines while our own army is still encircling its capital city. But, given the long years of closed borders, this is also the first opportunity we have had of tasting the products of the Lebanese vineyards and cellars which, after all have to contend with very similar climatic features to our own.

During a recent visit to Beirut I was able to taste two bottles of local wine. Neither, I must say, can be said to be 'examples of Lebanon's best products.' My companion's choice of food — fish, and the impossibility of bringing wine back with me precluded selecting what is reputed to be the best Lebanese wine — Chateau Musar.

In 1979 wine buffs at the Bristol World Wine Fair gave rave reviews to a new discovery. An (until then) unknown cellar master, Serge Hochar from Lebanon had presented a few cases of red wine which were immediately lauded as "the discoveries of the fair." Since then they have been much in demand and were fetching good prices on European and American markets.

According to the label, the Chateau Musar wineries are situated in Ghazir which is north-east of Jouniye. The grapes are grown in the Bekaa Valley which is still under Syrian control, but whether the winery itself is accessible to Israelis or not, I do not know.

Chateau Musar, said to be the third largest winery in Lebanon, was established in 1930 by Gaston Hochar. It is his son Serge (a Bordeaux-trained oenologist) who has transformed Chateau Musar from a domestic into an internationally known wine.

He introduced some noble French varieties like Chardonnay and Sauvignon (planted on the high cooler mountain slopes) and Cabernet Sauvignon and Pinot Noir in the Bekaa valley. It is these last two varieties which are said to be responsible for the now-renowned Chateau Musar. So much for theory since one cannot write about the wine without having tasted it and visited the cellars.

It is one of those strange aspects of the Israeli presence in Beirut that the IDF spokesman's office in the city has become something of a tourist and restaurant information centre. The government press office's Rafi Horowitz who seems to make daily trips to the Lebanese capital, hands out cards of eateries he has visited with various recommendations. This has already drawn wry observations from the hacks in the town like "Rafi's Restaurant Review" and "Rafi's Forks."

Acting on Rafi's rave recommendation we made our way for a late lunch to the Sultan Ibrahim Restaurant on the main road linking Beirut to Jouniye.

We should have realised on seeing the marble facade and entering the air-conditioned interior that we were in for an expensive afternoon. We emerged an hour and a half later having left IS450 each with the proprietor. There are more expensive restaurants in Tel Aviv or Jerusalem but that's still not cheap.

Our first course was the obligatory meze of Middle Eastern salads which were excellent. Of particular note was a Lebanese variety of the traditional Greek salad with the salty Bulgarian-type cheese. Sultan Ibrahim offered the vegetables chopped finely with the crumbled cheese and a generous dash of very aromatic olive oil.

As a main course I selected locos or grey mullet which was supposed to be grilled. I found it tasty without being exceptional and must say that I found very little evidence of charcoal fire — the skin was hardly seared.

Most of my companions chose barbouza (red mullet) which was far better. The fish had definitely been grilled and was firm without being dry.

Our final course was some local watermelon and a large platter piled high with delicious red cherries scattered with ice cubes. Need I say more than that the fresh cherries and the ice cubes were the highlight of the meal.

Now to the wines. We had chosen both a Coteaux de Ksara white and a Chateau Musar rose. Both were disappointing. The white was flat with no particular bouquet or aroma that suggested any particular grape as its main component. As is the case in Israel, I suspect that Lebanese winemakers have yet to introduce steel fermentation tanks and have to contend with long and hot summers. By comparison, we all agreed that the superior Israeli whites were way ahead — although, to be fair we were going by memory — a notoriously fickle tool. To be fair to a wine it should be compared with others at one tasting.

The rose was even more insipid and had an unpleasant almost soapy after-taste. So much so, that there was more than a suspicion that what we were drinking was a coupage of red and white wines rather than a wine made from one or two recognized rose varieties.

But if the wines we chose were a disappointment the service in the restaurant was more sophisticated than one finds in most Israeli establishments. The waiter, who might have been a wine steward was careful to show us the label and decorated professionally wiping the lip of the bottle with a clean white cloth. The wine glasses however, could have been cleaner.

A glance at the odd store in Beirut and some in Tyre and Sidon shows that the Lebanese import French as well as Cypriot wines. But, like grocers in Israel they have no idea of how to store wine. The bottles are kept upright, often in the hottest, part of the shop and sometimes even exposed to direct sunlight.

But none of this should bother the Israeli consumer for the time being. Talking of the wines available in the current theatre of military operations is something of an exercise in voyeurism — given the diligent and entirely justified examinations by the military police at Rosh Hanikra to prevent smuggling and looting.

Mighty micro

Her Hecht expounds the magic and the short comings of her microwave oven.

DO I NEED a microwave oven? This was not the question I asked myself when tales of the miraculous powers of this invention first reached my ears. What I did ask was, "Do I want a microwave oven?" And the answer — if only because this fabled machine can really save time — was an emphatic "yes."

Unlike a food-processor, that other new appliance that more people want than need, a microwave oven is not something you can fit in a spare corner on your kitchen countertop. Even if you can find room for it on a counter, it is too high to fit underneath cupboards which may be above. It is too heavy to be put on top of the refrigerator, where it would be uncomfortably high anyway. We finally put it on a shelf in our enclosed kitchen balcony.

With our new magic box finally installed, we decided to see if it really could work miracles... and behold, it could. A bowl of leftover spaghetti visited the black box for 60 seconds and came out piping hot.

This was a definite improvement over the conventional methods of reheating spaghetti: either cooking it with large amounts of margarine to keep it from sticking to the pot, or using a steamer and ending up with lots of utensils to wash.

The ability to heat food in the dish on which it is served is, for me, the great boon of the microwave oven. And it allows me to cater to the varied tastes of my family when they each want different leftovers without anyone having to wash mountains of pots afterwards. Even if everyone is eating the same soup, for example, each person can have it heated in separate dishes to the temperature he or she prefers.

Friends who visit with their babies can heat a bottle in 45 seconds — faster than junior can work himself up into a frenzy of hunger. Finally, my husband often comes home from work long after the rest of the family has finished dinner. In two or three minutes his dinner is on the table, and there are no pots to wash.

But did we get this expensive black box just to heat leftovers and to spare us potwashing? The recipe book that came with the oven has colour photographs of mouth-watering dishes including appetizers, entrees, and desserts.

Can you prepare an entire meal in the microwave oven? The answer is yes, if you don't care much about the texture of the food. And therein lies the catch. Food will go in raw and come out cooked in just minutes; since people first discovered that meat tastes better cooked than raw, we've come a long way — and often differ — in our expectations of what the end product should be.

THE TEXTURE of microwave-cooked food is the result of how the oven works. As I understand it, conventional gas or electric ovens roast or bake by heating the air around the food; this heat cooks the food from the outside in, and facilitates browning.

The microwave oven does not heat the air around the food. Microwaves bombard the molecules in the food and set them dancing. As they jitterbug frantically, the food is heated and/or cooked, from the inside out. Foods with a "casing" (potatoes, eggplants, apples) are steamed inside their natural coverings and must be pierced before cooking to keep them from bursting. Foods cooked in closed utensils are also steamed. Thus, chicken prepared in a closed pot in the microwave oven is very similar to chicken cooked in a pressure-cooker.

Regarding baking in the microwave oven, the miracle is that by the time you've washed the mixing bowls, the cake is ready. This is a definite advantage if you have little advance notice that guests are coming. If you have no advance notice and are lucky enough to have a cake in the freezer, you can defrost and heat it in the microwave oven in a couple of minutes and fool your guests into thinking that you just happened to have a cake in the oven when they dropped in.

Pans to bake the cake in are another story. If you don't already own a pyrex baking dish, you will have to invest in new baking pans because you cannot use any kind of metal utensil in the microwave oven.

MICROWAVE cakes often don't get baked in the centre. (I suppose you can solve this problem by using a bundt pan, because then the cake has no centre!) They also do not brown, which isn't a disaster if they contain cocoa or cinnamon, or if you frost them.

The cakes will also feel a bit sticky on top when they are baked in the microwave, which was my undoing on Tu B'Shvat. The cake I baked did not look done, so I baked it a total of an extra four minutes. The cake still did not look finished, but I didn't want to overbake it. I covered the still-sticky top, and cut into it to serve the guests. Perhaps I should say I hacked into it for I really had a tree there, rather than a cake. Four extra minutes is a long time in the baking career of a microwave cake, which normally lasts eight to 12 minutes!

What is wonderful is that it takes 2 minutes to bake a crumb crust in the microwave oven, and that is the base of my favourite summer no-bake cheesecake. And, since the microwave oven generates no heat, I needn't worry about heating up the kitchen in summer when I bake cakes or casseroles.

But best of all, the microwave oven is a great conversation piece. Visitors to our home never fail to be astounded at the sight of a rock-hard frozen roll transformed into a piping hot delicacy in just 30 seconds. It really is magic.

Do you need a microwave oven? Probably not. But if you have one, you might like to try these recipes.

Instant "Pizza"

Spread a slice of bread with ketchup or leftover spaghetti sauce. Top with a slice of yellow cheese. Put on a plate and heat in microwave oven for 30 seconds.

Strawberry Cheesecake

Crust:

- 2 1/2 c. crushed plain cookies (petit beurre)
- 50 gr. margarine (unsalted)
- 2 tsp. cinnamon

Put margarine in a mixing bowl and heat in microwave oven for 30-40 seconds (till melted). Stir in cookies and cinnamon, mixing well. Spread crumb mixture on the bottom of a one-quart pyrex baking dish. Put in microwave oven and bake one minute. Turn dish 180° and bake one minute. Remove baking dish and let crust cool.

Cheese filling:

- 200 gr. unsalted margarine
- 4 tubs of 9 per cent white cheese
- 1 1/2 c. sugar
- 2 tsp. liquid vanilla flavouring

Put margarine in a mixing bowl and heat in microwave oven for two minutes (till melted). Stir in sugar, then cheese, then vanilla. Spoon over crust and refrigerate two hours.

Topping:

Decorate cheese filling with slices of fresh strawberries or wedges of canned pineapple. Prepare a package of instant strawberry-flavoured gelatin by mixing the powder with two cups of boiling water. When all the powder is dissolved, spoon the gelatin carefully over the cheese filling. Refrigerate cake uncovered.

Cinnamon Coffee Cake

- 1 1/2 c. boiling water
- 1 c. uncooked oats
- 1 1/2 c. margarine (unsalted)
- 1 1/2 c. all-purpose flour
- 1 tsp. soda
- 1 1/2 tsp. cinnamon
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1 c. sugar
- 1 c. brown sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 c. brown sugar
- 2 tsp. milk
- 6 tsp. margarine (unsalted)
- 1/2 c. chopped pecans
- 1 c. shredded coconut

Pour water over oats. Break margarine into chunks and drop onto oats. Stir mixture until margarine melts. Sift flour, soda, cinnamon and salt. Stir into oat mixture. Mix well.

Beat and stir in brown sugar. Beat thoroughly. Bake in two-quart pyrex pan about 12 minutes. Turn pan 90° every minute.

Combine sugar, milk and margarine in mixing bowl. Bring to boil and continue cooking one minute in microwave oven. Blend in pecans and coconut. Spread on cake.

ENERGY & THE CONSUMER

How to Stimulate Local Production

Representatives of counselling and industrial firms from the United States, Canada, Australia, England, Italy, Germany and Holland, who had maintained close work and business ties with the Electric Corporation in connection with the construction of new power station in Hadera, were the guests of the station management in the month of May. They had been invited to celebrate, together with the Corporation executive, the inauguration of the station's coal fuelled operation.

Accompanying the guests were many Israeli manufacturers. For some, this was an opportunity to strike up an acquaintanceship with foreign manufacturers, with whom they had been in contact. For others this was a chance to forge new ties.

These links between local and foreign manufacturers have come about thanks to the international policy of the Electric Corporation. According to this policy, purchases from foreign manufacturers of equipment valued at more than $100,000 are conditional on allowance for part of the actual manufacture to be done in Israel. In cases where more than $250,000 worth of equipment are concerned, foreign suppliers must reciprocate by making local purchases of at least 25% of the value of the Israeli order.

This is how the Electric Corporation has been stimulating domestic production and, in fact, accounts to date for the highest share of commercial exports.

Technical Information Centre — For Work On The Grid

Supplying electricity to an entire structure or a flat entails a great deal of coordination, from the very moment the electricity has been ordered until the hookup of the structure to the grid. In order to implement the work, the Electric Corporation must plan its electric line route, obtain approval for the plans, measure and mark the work areas, etc. All this in order to allow for the ultimate grid work and hookup.

Formerly, this lengthy process entailed individual contact between the various offices and departments. For approximately a year and a half now, the Corporation's northern district has been using a technical information centre which, by way of direct computer linkup, accumulates all information on work being implemented in the field throughout the entire district. Thus, it is no longer necessary, when ordering an electric hookup, to make the personal trip to Corporation offices for information on the progress of one's request. One simply dials 04-642084 for information on the work being done, what the applicant must now do, etc.

The programme is based on grid work followup from the moment the work was requested until its completion. This makes it possible to improve service to the public.

As for the Electric Corporation, the programme enables the determining of work priorities, forecasting employment load and proper work planning.

Presented as a Public Service by the Israel Electric Corporation Ltd.

Selling captured weapons may help pay for war

Economy equal to war effort: Patt

By ROY ISACOWITZ
Jerusalem Post Reporter

"The economy was as well prepared for the war as the army," Industry and Trade Minister Gideon Patt told foreign correspondents here yesterday. Despite the fact that up to 60 per cent of the workforce in some industries had been called up, production fell by only 5 per cent in June, he said.

This increase in productivity, plus the smooth functioning of inland and overseas transport services, ensured that Israel's foreign trade did not suffer as a consequence of the war, Patt said. "There was not one single case of export orders remaining unfilled...during the month of June," he claimed. The war did not influence the country's balance of payments, since it had no effect on imports.

The sector which had felt the consequences of the war most severely was the tourism industry, which showed a drop of 22 per cent over June 1981, the minister said. He agreed with a questioner that paying for the war would have an inflationary effect, but he declined to estimate the inflation rate for the second half of the year. The ministry's pre-war goal of a 85-90 per cent inflation rate for 1982 was now unrealistic, Patt said.

Patt repeated the estimate he made last month that the direct and indirect cost of the war would amount to about $1 billion. He added that replacement of military equipment could exceed $500 million, which means that, at the present rate of exchange, the war will cost some $538 billion. Compared to the cost of previous wars, Operation Peace for Galilee had been a cheap war, Patt said. The 1973 Yom Kippur War had cost nearly the entire GNP of that year.

He estimated that the fiscal measures announced last month, which included a three per cent increase in VAT, a two per cent tax on stock market transactions, and a $500 travel tax, would cover about 50 per cent of the cost of the war. The rest will have to be covered by new taxes, or with the aid of Jews from abroad, who have been asked to "help out" with activities such as education, health and welfare, so that money which is usually directed to those fields can be made available to pay for the war.

Patt also mentioned the possibility of selling some of the "huge quantities" of military supplies and equipment captured in Lebanon. But he refused to speculate on how much money might be raised this way or who the buyers might be.

The war in Lebanon could bring economic, as well as political benefits, Patt said. For one thing, he expressed the hope that the war would lead to increased demand for Israeli technological know-how. A stable government in Lebanon could provide the basis for substantial trade between the two countries, he said. Lebanese traders are coming to meet their Israeli counterparts and deals for food and, in particular, building materials, are already being concluded. But Patt emphasized that "we will not allow any damage to be done to the economic infrastructure of Lebanon. We do not want one square inch of Lebanon politically and we do not want anything from Lebanon economically."

Patt was unable to estimate the cost of rehabilitating Lebanon, but called on the international community to play a part. He said the amount Israel was able to contribute to the rebuilding was in the region of the $65 million already contributed by the U.S.

Israel's industrial exports rose by three per cent in the first six months of 1982, compared with 12 per cent in 1981. Patt attributed this drop to the economic recession in Europe and the U.S. "I will be very glad if we finish this year with a 4 or 5 per cent increase," he said.

A new method using laser beams to read price codes is cutting down waiting time at supermarket checkout counters. The method is now in use at the Cooperative Supermarket in the capital's Hamashbir Hamerkazi building. If proven successful, it will be employed at other branches too.

Bill to link uncollected state loan certificates

By ARYEH RUBINSTEIN
Post Knesset Reporter

Holders of state loan certificates who for any reason did not cash them in for at least three months after they matured will be paid a linkage differential, under a bill that passed its first reading in the Knesset yesterday.

Up to now, no linkage differential was paid, although interest was paid if at least six months had passed since the maturity date.

The bill was presented by Deputy Finance Minister Haim Kaufman, who also presented a bill, less liberal, dealing with statutory pensions not paid for at least six months after application was made. This too was referred to the Finance Committee.

At present, only the nominal sum is paid in such cases, regardless of how much time elapsed since the filing of an application.

Under the Pensions Bill (Compensation for Tardiness in Payment), payment for the period from the end of the six months to the date of payment will be made at the current pension rate, rather than the rate in force at the time of application.

But such retroactive payment at current rates is limited to 12 months. If the time lapse from the date of application is over 18 months, the applicant will be paid at the old rate for any back period over 12 months.

Kaufman said this formulation met the recommendation of the Supreme Court that the legislator strike a fair balance between the demand of the invalid who has waited long for his pension and the resources at the state's disposal.

Industry output steady

Post Economic Reporter

Industrial production in the first quarter of the year remained largely unchanged in real terms compared with the three preceding quarters — according to data released yesterday by the Central Bureau of Statistics.

However, while the electric and electronics industries recorded real increases of 13 per cent, and the machinery and transport 4, equipment branches increased real production by 7-8 per cent, output fell by some 7 per cent in foods, and in paper and printing. In the other industries the increases or declines were more moderate.

The data further show that in the first quarter of the year industrial employment rose by one per cent over the last quarter of 1981, but the total of man-days worked remained unchanged.

Nominal wages rose by 26 per cent over the last quarter of 1981 and by 122 per cent compared with the first quarter of 1981. The corresponding rises in the consumer price index were 20.5 per cent and 104 per cent, so that real wages in the first quarter of this year were higher on the basis of both comparisons.

Funds dealing in shares fared best

Post Economic Reporter

Mutual funds specializing in shares have yielded the highest return in the last three months, as shown by data published yesterday by the Bank of Israel. The funds yielded 42 per cent in the quarter ending in June.

Funds which invested mainly in foreign currency came second, with a yield of 36 per cent, while those investing mainly in linked bonds had a return of 29.8 per cent.

The funds specializing in shares have shown the highest return continuously for two years now. In the last 24 months, these funds have yielded 950 per cent, compared with 476 per cent for foreign currency funds and 398 per cent for funds specializing in linked securities.

Standardized reporting for all funds

State Comptroller Yitzhak Tunik

has recommended that the Treasury oblige provident funds to disclose their rates of return according to a standard reporting system.

The application of equal reporting procedures for all provident funds, the State Comptroller says, will enable the public to follow the performance of the funds and to compare them.

Tunik also recommends that the funds be allowed to invest at their discretion a higher proportion of the deposits they receive from members. This, the Comptroller says, will encourage competition among them. At present, the provident funds may invest 8 per cent of their deposits freely, while the rest must be invested in a manner approved by the Treasury.

Ministries fail to submit 1983 budget plan

Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter

No ministries have responded to the Treasury's request made a month-and-a-half ago to submit their 1983 budget proposals by July 10.

In a memorandum sent to the directors-general of the ministries and other budget-supported bodies a month-and-a-half ago, Treasury budget director Ya'acov Gadish requested that the 1983 proposals cut expenditures by 5 per cent and manpower by 2 per cent.

Gadish has postponed the July 10 deadline by a month, but he expects only three ministries to comply with it.

Despite the anticipated lack of cooperation from the ministries, the Treasury plans to submit its own budget proposal before the High Holidays, in September. The budget department has already begun preparing its proposal and will negotiate with the ministries only after it has been submitted to the cabinet.

Sharir calls for peace congress in capital

Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir

said yesterday that the war in Lebanon could be over "within a few days," and that Jerusalem should then organize a peace congress with Jewish, Moslem and Christian participants.

Speaking at a ceremony for promoters of tourism at the Jerusalem Hilton, Sharir told the representatives of the tourist industry to be ready for an unprecedented wave of tourism when the war is over.

New sparkle for local wine industry?

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

RISHON LEZION. — Yisrael Lerman has been appointed managing director of the Société Coopérative Vigneronne des Grandes Caves Rishon Lezion and Zichron Ya'acov, or as it is better known, the Carmel Mizrahi Winery.

Formerly the European manager of the Dead Sea Works, Lerman promises to shake up the wine industry. He announced that his aim is to get Israelis to drink more wine. With a consumption of only 4.6

litres per capita a year, Israelis have one of the lowest wine consumptions in the world. By comparison, the French, Spaniards and Italians drink about 100 litres a year.

Lerman thinks he can increase wine drinking here and he bases his optimism on the fact that Americans, who were not great wine drinkers, doubled their consumption in recent years to 10 litres.

Lerman also hopes that by 1985 exports of wines and spirits will reach $10 million a year.

British banks cut interest to 12 per cent

LONDON (AP). — Major British banks

yesterday cut their interest rates by one-half per cent in a move welcomed by industry.

National Westminster, one of the country's "big four" commercial banks, was first to announce that its base lending rate to major borrowers would be cut from 12½ to 12 per cent. Lloyds, Barclays and Midland banks followed suit. It was the eighth successive cut in rates since last October, when banks charged a basic 16 per cent interest.

The Bank of England had edged money market rates down on Monday, signalling that the time was right for lower commercial rates.

The prospect of lower borrowing charges for companies, recovering from Britain's worst economic slump since the 1930s, was good news for industry.

Dissent and dissenters

THE PRESENT war, government spokesmen are at pains to point out, is not the first in the country's annals to show lack of complete national unanimity. This is no doubt true. Suffice it to recall that during the War of Independence there was not only some difference of opinion about matters of strategy but also, for a while, actual dissidence by military bands. Yet always, until now, when war broke out the nation would be fairly at one in backing it as a legitimate fight for the defence of the country's freedom and independence.

Questions about the absolute necessity of taking up arms had not been raised by any except insignificant marginal groups until Israel launched Operation Peace for Galilee. That such questions have now been raised is highly unfortunate, but it is due to the very nature of the war and not to party politicking or to lack of loyalty. Yet from the start attempts have been made to label criticism of aspects of the war as rank treason, or something akin to it.

Now there is some danger that a campaign may be afoot to suppress criticism altogether.

A Herut Knesset member, Micha Kleiner, has come up with the noble idea that the defence minister should be authorized to ban all rallies and demonstrations in wartime. The proposal has been made in earnest, but even some of Mr. Kleiner's colleagues are wary of the extremism it breathes.

The government, it seems, will shy away from a frontal assault on freedom of expression, even in wartime. On the other hand it will, if it can, serve notice, by resorting to legal measures, of the danger of straying too far. Thus the police have been instructed by Acting Attorney-General Meir Gabbai to investigate the circumstances of Uri Avnery's meeting with Yasser Arafat in West Beirut earlier this month, and Mr. Gabbai is giving consideration to the possibility of bringing charges against Mapam for allegedly distributing an anti-war circular among frontline troops in Lebanon.

Whether either case will actually come to court is uncertain. The attorney-general may have a case against Mr. Avnery for making contact with a "foreign agent." But since it is likely that Mr. Avnery, as editor of Haolam Hazeh, may show "reasonable cause" for his conduct, and no intention to harm Israel's security, which is a defence under the law, the case is liable to turn out a poor one.

Legalities apart, however, the shameful knowing which Mr. Avnery, according to the published record, exhibited at his meeting with the PLO chieftain rightly dismayed, to put it mildly, most Israelis. Freedom is not only a right. It must also be exercised with responsibility, in order that it be preserved. But this apparently would be too restrictive for Mr. Avnery.

In the case of Mapam, Mr. Begin has decided, in advance of any investigation, that this was a leaflet which Mapam deliberately handed out to the troops in Lebanon. Such politicization of the army is barred by the law, as Likud MK Ehud Olmert has noted.

Mr. Olmert was fair enough to agree that it would be equally reprehensible for the Likud to circulate its views among army people. But this is precisely what is being done through the massive supply of the Likud's weekly newsmagazine, Yoman Hashavua, which is nothing if not an extended propaganda leaflet, to the troops in Lebanon. Mapam leaders, on the other hand, emphatically deny that their own circular was meant for anyone but their own party activists.

Some copies might have gotten to Lebanon. But the larger question is whether the troops up north should be insulated from any opinion but that held by the government. Such insulation is, in practice, impossible to achieve, even by disallowing the despatch, through army channels, of any but afternoon newspapers to Lebanon. Dissent, such as it is, is a spontaneous growth, whether in the rear or up front, and ultimately it is a function of Israeli democracy.

It must, however, be allowed not only in the community at large, but within the parties themselves. The principle of freedom of expression is certainly not served when Mapam itself bars a dissenter of its own. Knesset Member Imri Ron, who is a reserve officer, from going abroad on behalf of the Foreign Ministry to help disprove the hostile allegations of massive destruction and massacre by Israeli troops in Lebanon.

Mapam cannot have it both ways. If suppression of dissent within its own ranks is for it a higher priority than helping the nation expose the calumnies of its enemies, it relegates itself to the status of a closed cell and not a national political party. And if that is the case, the Labour Party would do well to review the usefulness of its alignment with Mapam.

WHETHER the war in Lebanon will prove to be a major breakthrough in undermining the PLO or whether Israel's second longest war — ironically waged against her weakest enemy — will prove to be only a predictable exercise in futility, is still, to my mind very much an open question.

Even if the political and military standoff in Beirut ends with the expulsion of the PLO from that city, and possibly from most of Lebanon, it will take quite some time until all the facts are in to make possible a judicious weighing of the pros and cons concerning the operation.

In the "Wars of the Jews" internal debate, just beginning to pick up steam in Israel, one of the arguments adduced by critics of the war bothers me. This is the assertion that "wars change nothing," the implication being that it is futile to initiate military action with the idea of bringing about desirable political change.

To my regret, my own experience and my reading of modern history have led me to the opposite conclusion. As much as we may find it difficult to swallow, the fact remains that wars, lesser military actions, the threat to resort to them, and even more slyful uses of violence and terrorism are the major, albeit not the sole, human mechanism of political and social change.

Certainly the effects of diplomacy, legislation and of consciously directed formal education, to mention only some alternatives, pale into insignificance when compared with the use of violence as a mechanism for such change. Perhaps the only other instrument that equals violence for sheer effectiveness is the persistent propagation of ideas — primarily by demagogic means speaking to the gut emotions rather than to the intellect — coupled with a resort to violence at the right moment. This has been true of ideas that fall under the headings of religion, nationalism, communism and fascism.

Before writing off the effectiveness of bellicose actions, one should dispassionately consider recent world history and Israel's experience.

What especially bothers me is the people using the anti-war argument, both here and abroad. Those who tend to advance this thesis are often the same ones who tended to express vast admiration for the wisdom of the late Anwar Sadat in initiating the Yom Kippur War, not for the purpose of defeating Israel, but for that of breaking a political log-jam where political and diplomatic methods failed.

This admiration for the "shrewd and wise" Sadat is in the same vein of understanding expressed by many of these people for the PLO's indiscriminate terror. How often have I heard the idea, "It really is inhuman how the PLO has turned Lebanese civilians and even their own Palestinian women and children into innocent hostages and human shields, but after all what alternative was there for a powerless guerrilla organization?"

IT IS FAR from pointless to reiterate that Israel is engaged in a three-generation-long war with Arab nationalism that has not been of its making. The Jewish people, as a result of a 2,000 year history of powerlessness in exile and dispersion, has developed into the most pacifistic of the world's cultures. They had learned the valid historical lesson that whoever won the countless wars in the regions of our exile, the Jews in the middle were always the losers.

It should be perfectly obvious why so many Jews, in Israel and abroad, find it well nigh impossible to unlearn these lessons in the new national situation in which we find ourselves.

A nation like Israel, however, which finds its very existence threatened, is perfectly within its rights in resorting to war to defend itself. And not only to "defensive" wars when the enemy is already at our gates.

The problem is not that the resort to war in our case is illegitimate. The question to be asked is whether the specific wars declared by our leaders and their timing are also wise.

One is left feeling in the present case that the impressive military planning for the operation in Lebanon was in no way matched by the political planning and analysis. This disparity between Israel's military and political effectiveness has been a sore point for this country many times in the past. It would seem to be even more acute in the present circumstances, primarily because the present government is the most insular and parochial and the least sensitive to world forces that Israel has ever had.

The shame of it all is that Israel certainly does possess the human and intellectual staff as good as its military one. But many of these minds have been consciously alienated and shunted aside by the priorities granted to partisan politics and social polarization which have been the hallmark of Mr. Begin's leadership in the last few years.

It is not too late, nor too fatuous, to express the hope that Prime Minister Begin consider the possibility of a change in course, one in the direction of marshalling the country's full resources towards dealing with the political problems highlighted by the problematic and so far frustrating military success in Lebanon.

READERS' LETTERS

GRIEVING FAMILIES

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I am the descendant of a rabbinical family, the only son of Simha Guterman, a Zionist and socialist who died as a hero and a fighter against the Nazis in the Warsaw uprising. I was rescued from the Holocaust and brought to Israel. I served in the army and built my home in Israel.

A son was born to me, called Raz — a son who grew up to be a great pride to his family, strong and beautiful and honest and upright in his character. Despite personal misfortunes and difficulties, I raised him with unending love and affection and with great pride as a father. In my secret thoughts, I saw him as a link in the chain of history and in his being and character, along with others like him, the realization of our people's renewal.

When the time came for him to join the army, he volunteered in the spirit in which he was educated to one of the special units, one of the most challenging units of the army, and there he served with great effort and devotion. He was due to be released in a few weeks and his plans were many.

Along with my son and his friends, I was aware of the government's intentions and we lived in constant fear. Every night, I went to bed with a prayer in my heart that war might be avoided.

Every child knows that Menachem Begin and Ariel Sharon sought a reason to break into Lebanon to instigate the first war that was not a war of defence. They sought to undo with this questionable military victory all their failures, inadequacies and frustrations.

I remained with a prayer in my heart that reasonable and concerned people in Israel and abroad would prevent them from this madness, but my desire and the desire of the sons was not fulfilled.

The bullet fired in London caused them to send lethal war machines to spread death into the cities of Lebanon and its villages. When the Katyushas returned fire, the hour they were waiting for impatiently finally arrived.

With unabashed nerve, Menachem Begin, Ariel Sharon, Rafael Eitan and the ministers who voted for the war in Lebanon sloganized "Peace for the Galilee" when there had been no shots fired on the Galilee for over a year.

My son Raz, my beloved son, and his friends were sent with their unit in great haste and in frenzied irresponsibility to bloody battle to take the Beaufort. He was the first one to break through the trenches leading to the fortress. He fought valiantly and there he found his death.

Thus was severed the chain of unending Jewish generations, ancient and full of heroism and suffering, and thus was cut off the flowering of a life that was just beginning to blossom.

And thus they caused the destruction of my whole world. How many years would it have taken the Palestinian terrorists to kill and injure so many Israeli soldiers as these people did in the course of one week of this damnable war? How much loss and mourning have they caused?

Even before the blood was dried on the rocks of the mountain of Beaufort, Begin and Sharon hurried into their helicopters, surrounded by photographers, motion picture cameras and microphones to declare and sound forth with vanity. They did not even ask for forgiveness for the mistakes or the dark devices of their nationalistic schemes and their adventurous irresponsibility.

And the voice of our sons' blood cries from the ground!

And if they have only a spark of conscience and humanity, may my great pain pursue them forever — the suffering of a father in Israel whose world has been destroyed and the joy of life destroyed in him forever.

Sir, — Our son is missing in Lebanon. We have no idea whether he is among the wounded or the dead. If dead, we do not know if he will ever be so acknowledged or given a Jewish burial.

His young friends and comrades-in-arms visit us regularly and we try to comfort and support each other. Though we do not know it, his fate has already been decided for life or death. If he died, he did so defending his country and his people's right to live in it in peace. The fate of his young friends lies in the balance. Each day that passes sees more boys wounded and killed by terrorists' mines and snipers.

Those who give aid and comfort to Arafat and his terrorists encourage them to continue their fight. They are the classic fifth column in our midst. The blood and suffering of our boys who are dying now are on their hands.

For us the war has ended — but for the sake of our son's comrades, let Peace Now stop its self-hate for Jewish values long enough to enable them to return home safely. It is Peace Now and not the leadership of this country and the army that are immoral.

GLORY TO GOD

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — As an American Jew, I am sick of hearing so much praise and glory being given to American built aircraft and the Israel Air Force. There are a few of us who realize God brought us here and God is keeping us. If we continue to glory so much in ourselves, refusing to give glory where it is due, we are all liable to wind up "by the rivers of Babylon" again.
